

Fitness programs promote better health; results 'feel really good,' says Y professor

By HEIDI BOLINDER
Universe Staff Writer

A regular fitness program takes motivation and time, but the benefits make exercising worthwhile, said Robert K. Conlee, associate professor and exercise bio-chemist in the BYU physical education department.

It is recommended that a fitness program be incorporated in one's life, just as members of the S Church live the Word of Wisdom, said Conlee. Some benefits of a fitness program include weight reduction, less risk of heart disease and an increase of self-confidence, he said.

Getting started in an exercise program appears to be hard and requires an element of discomfort, Conlee said. "But once you get started you feel good."

Conlee said there are four aspects of fitness—cardiovascular fitness, weight control, strength and flexibility.

Cardiovascular fitness is most important, he said. "I recommend aerobic exercise to maintain the highest level of fitness."

Aerobic activities have three things in common, he said. A person must do them 15-60 minutes without stopping, they are rhythmic in nature, and they use large muscle masses, said Conlee. Examples are walking, jogging, bicycling, swimming, jumping rope, aerobic dance, hiking, and cross-country skiing.

A person can conduct two different tests to see how fit he or she is—the bench step test and a timed run, Conlee said. "In most tests for fitness, the heart rate is used for the estimate of fitness level," he said. "The heart rate increases as exercise intensity increases."

The bench step test requires a person to step up and down a bench for five minutes. After doing this, the person sits down and after 15 seconds his or her pulse is taken for the estimate of fitness level, he said. "The heart rate increases as exercise intensity increases."

The other test is one used in the P.E. 177 (Fitness for Life) courses and requires running for one-and-a-half miles, said Conlee. Then a person should refer to the chart in the course's text book, and this too will give a person his level of fitness, Conlee said.

Tom Wangemann, a junior in physical education from Atlanta, Ga., 'lengthens his stride' in a personal fitness program.

The P.E. 177 course teaches individuals the benefits of a fitness program and how to apply a fitness program for their own use. "If students appreciate the knowledge and application of P.E. 177, it would be their most important class taken at the university," said Conlee.

It is recommended that when a person begins an exercise program, he should do it for four or five days a week. When a comfortable level is retained, the program can be done three days a week, he said.

"I'm not a physical fitness nut. Fitness needs to be done in moderation," Conlee said. "A good fitness program of 30-60 minutes a day is quite adequate and has been shown to be very effective."

There is evidence that a regular fitness program will reduce a number of risk factors associated with heart disease, he added. Some of these factors include blood lipid levels, blood cholesterol levels and hypertension.

A lack of exercise in one's lifestyle is a risk factor in heart disease, he said. "Obesity is also a major risk factor and exercise reduces a person's weight."

One of the major causes of obesity is inactivity, and the incidence of obesity can be reduced by increasing the activity level, he added. In dieting, an exercise program is essential because exercise stimulates fat cells to reduce fat, said Conlee.

If a woman has been exercising before pregnancy, she can continue while she is pregnant after consulting a physician, Conlee said. Numerous benefits can result, including an easier delivery and a more rapid recovery, he said.

Motivation is the biggest factor in beginning a fitness program, Conlee said. "When a person is physically fit, it results in a feeling of self-fulfillment, pride and a better self-image," he said. "When fit, one can also tolerate a greater amount of stress."

Handicapped student hit by vehicle in intersection

A wheelchair student was struck by an automobile last week while attempting to cross a BYU intersection. The girl is one of several handicapped students forced to find an alternate route to campus now that construction blocks the top end of the Helaman Halls ramp, said Denmark Jensen, coordinator for handicapped students at BYU.

The construction involves re-routing of utilities that run under that part of the ramp, said Al Nelson, assistant engineer of the BYU physical plant. Workers are in the beginning stages of construction of the E. Eldon Tanner business building.

According to Jensen, the girl involved in the accident, who asked not to be identified, was knocked out of her wheelchair by a young man in a "dilapidated red car." The driver applied his brakes, but could not stop in time, Jensen said. The girl, who has been recovering from a cancer operation on her hip, was in the crosswalk when struck. She was not injured, he said.

According to Jensen, there are about five wheelchair students living in Helaman Halls. These students now come to campus along 1230 North.

Most other handicapped students live in Deseret Towers, said Jensen. However, there are no facilities for wheelchairs there he said; consequently these handicapped students must make their way up the hill west of campus.

Are Jews' prayers heard?

NEW YORK (AP) — Many Southern Baptists, including some key officials and theologians, are appalled at statements of the denomination's president, the Rev. Bailey Smith, that God doesn't hear the prayers of Jews.

Expressions of shock and distress have come from leaders in many quarters of the nation's largest Protestant body, including its missionaries in Israel.

"Presumptuous arrogance," some Baptist reaction went. "Heresy... self-righteous bigotry."

Smith's statements are not only unscriptural and unkind, they are far removed from the teachings and spirit of Jesus," says the Rev. J. William Angell, professor of religion at Wake Forest University in North Carolina.

Smith, pastor of First Baptist Church in Del City, Okla., and elected president of the 13.4-million-member denomination at its convention in St. Louis in June, reaffirmed his month-old statement.

Aspen Grove Club seminar gets mixed reaction

By HAMILTON
Universe Staff Writer

Aspen Grove Club's annual "Married Couples Seminar" received both positive and negative reactions from club members.

BYU is sponsoring club presidents' seminars being held this year and Saturday at Aspen Grove resort.

Each campus club is to attend this seminar in order to be eligible for scheduling facilities on campus.

Bill Winfield, vice-president of the ASBYU organization, said:

"The seminar was a good idea. It was well planned and the speakers were excellent."

McArthur, president of the ASBYU (National Student Speech and Hearing) club, said:

"I'm angry because I had to pay for the seminar. I am not in the social class at Aspen Grove."

He said that a more economical seminar could be held on campus.

Costs $2,000
The year's seminar cost the ASBYU organization office approximately $2,000. Last year the students who attended were charged $1. This year the organization office is charging more than last year. The cost is $18, with each student paying $6.50. Paul Cooper, president of the Kung Fu Club, said, "$6.50 is still a lot of money to pay; if the meeting is to be mandatory it should be free."

"The seminar was made mandatory by last year's organizations vice-president, Kelvin Cullimore, and Maren Mouritsen, the associate dean of student life. They made it mandatory so clubs couldn't claim to violate policy ignorantly," said Winfield.

"One week after I was elected last year I was told that Aspen Grove was reserved (for the seminar). At that time I really didn't have any information as to whether Aspen Grove was the best place for the seminar. My recommendation for next year is to have a mandatory seminar on campus from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday. It won't be as fun, but it will be a lot less costly."

Beginnings Friday
The seminar will begin Friday with registration between 3 and 5 p.m. A turkey dinner will be served between 5:30 and 6:15 p.m. David M. Sorenson, dean of student life will be the speaker that evening.

"The seminar will be presented with cover food, raising, club accounts, club publicity and meeting room scheduling," said Terry Huff, administrative assistant in the organizations office. Huff, who is in charge of this year's seminar, said, "The seminar is really organized. We have made car pool arrangements in advance, workbooks will be given to all who attend and all necessary club information will be well covered."

Russ Lowder, president of the Mime Club, plans to pay the full $18 seminar cost with Mime Club funds. He said, "The Mime Club voted to give the organizations office the full amount so student funds would not be used. It isn't fair that the students have to pay for a meeting that only involves club officers."

He said, "I'm petitioning to have this weekend at Aspen Grove canceled. There is no reason why the seminar can't be held on campus, and be over with in three or four hours."

Quite upset
Lowder added, "I'm quite upset about the whole weekend, there are no provisions for married students, the drive to Aspen Grove is inconvenient and there is no need to stretch the seminar out over two days."

"The Science Fiction Club and convention this weekend. They talked with Bill Winfield and told him that most of their officers could not attend the seminar because of the convention, but Bill would not make other arrangements for them."

"The organizations office has received both positive and negative comments regarding the seminar," said Winfield. "Most club members are excited, and anxious to attend. Most are looking forward to getting their questions answered. They want to get their clubs rolling. Also, officers have commented to me that they are anxious to hear Dean Sorenson's remarks."

Winfield said he feels the organizations office invested wisely in the seminar weekend. "We want the clubs to be able to run efficiently," he said. "There are 160 clubs on campus and we want them to all be successful. One-fourth of the student body are affected by clubs. There are more ways to help the student body than by just putting on a dance. It's a good expenditure."

Winfield said, "Since the seminar is being held at Aspen Grove many people are thinking that it is going to be like a youth conference. There are extra activities available but to participate in them you must either come to the seminar early or stay late."

Cooper said, "It sounds like a beautiful setting for the seminar, I can see why they chose Aspen Grove. But, it's an inconvenience for me to go. I'm married and I have to work this weekend. They don't have any housing facilities set up for marrieds anyway. I think that is discrimination against married people. Also, the seminar started out free earlier this year, now it costs $6.50."

Seminar chairman Terry Huff said, "The seminar was originally to be free to the officers by having the organizations office subsidize the full amount. But, an increase in the cost of the overnight housing forced us to charge the officers a nominal fee of $6.50. It's still a good deal for getting two meals and overnight housing at a resort."

"Aspen Grove was chosen because of its environment," Huff said. "There is a beautiful atmosphere up there in the mountains. We are hoping that the surroundings will create a relaxed feeling among the officers. We would like to see a lot of club intervention. We want the officers to gain confidence in the organizations office. We want them to realize what we have to offer them."

Ben Poquette of Utah battles Alex English of Denver under the boards during the 102-92 Nugget win in the Marriott Center Wednesday.

Soccercats head east to face league foes

After a comfortable week at home, the BYU soccer team heads east across the Rockies this week to face three tough Rocky Mountain Interscholastic Soccer League opponents in Colorado. The Soccer Cats are currently 4-5 and need the three conference wins to boost them past the .500 mark and keep them in the conference race. Last week, BYU whipped a so-so team from Santa Ana but lacked enough luster to impress Coach Jim Dunsen.

The Cougars' first game in the mountain country will be against Colorado School of Mines in Golden, Colo. on Thursday. The Oregidgers placed seventh in the RMISL last year and hope to improve their record this year with more experienced players.

Although the majority of their players are sophomores and juniors, two returnees, Jorge Lira and Tom Young, received post-season honors last year and should give the Oregidgers a shot in the arm this season.

Following the Thursday game, BYU travels to Denver to face Regis College. The Rangers won their first game against Colorado School of Mines 2-1. Last year, Regis had troubles finding the winning path and ended up with a 1-5 record in league play. The Cougars triumphed 5-1 in the only meeting between the two schools last fall.

Saturday, Denver University hosts the Cougars in what could turn into the toughest game of the trip for the Soccer Cats. Denver placed third in the RMISL last year with a 4-2 record and went 11-7 overall. One of their losses, however, came at the hands of the Cougars.

After the Colorado trip, BYU returns to Provo for the ninth annual BYU Soccer Invitational. Teams involved this year are: Air Force, University of Nevada-Las Vegas, and U.S. International University. The Invitational will run from Oct. 2 to Oct. 4 in Provo.

Following are the results of the young season for the Soccercats.

The most famous name in violin making is Amati. For three generations in the 16th and 17th centuries, this noble Italian family made the best violins in the world. Andrea Amati (1511-1579) was one of the first violin makers and is considered by some to have invented the instrument. His sons carried on the tradition and some of their instruments still survive. Andrea's grandson, Nicolo, was probably the best violin maker of all times. He taught his trade to the well known Antonio Stradivari.

Nuggets rock Utah Jazz 102-92

By GORDON MONSON
Universe Staff Writer

It wasn't the kind of night the Utah Jazz would like to remember.

The Jazz took a 102-92 beating at the hands of the Denver Nuggets before 7,142 halfway enthusiastic fans in the Marriott Center Tuesday night. Both teams showed signs of a long off season in the exhibition, but as the game wore on the Nuggets began showing signs of good NBA ball.

Despite an impressive showing by Jazz newcomer Billy McKinney, who led Jazz scorers with 27 points, and Adrian Dantley (22 points), the Jazz appeared unable to stay with the Nuggets down the stretch in the second half.

McKinney, acquired in an off season trade, showed flashes of brilliance. The quick 6-0 guard guided Jazz fast breaks and hit jumpers all over the floor in leading the Jazz to a 52-44 first half lead.

However, the lead crumbled as the third quarter progressed and the Nuggets took the lead they never again relinquished as the third period came to a close.

The Nuggets showed balanced scoring with four players in double figures. Leading Denver was Big Dan Issel and smooth Alex English. Both ended with 19 points. Guard Ken Higgs added 12.

The little Denver six-footer was the playmaker as the Nuggets went into an impressive motion game that seemed to confuse the Jazz late in the third quarter.

The crowd was treated to a typically physical NBA style of play, with the big boys flying in every which direction — fighting through screens, and at times setting formations resembling a Dallas Cowboys screen pass. It was tough under the basket all night.

The Jazz obviously missed the services of its two top draft picks — Darrell Griffith and John Duren. Both are holding out for large contracts. Jazz coach, Tom Nissalke was optimistic about the two joining the club in the near future.

"Hopefully our guys will be signing soon. Right now we just have a basic continuity, but not a lot of specific plays. We'll start putting more plays in soon. Griffith will have special plays designed for him." That is if the Jazz signs the Louisville star.

Nissalke was hopeful, but cautious about the current situation with Griffith and Duren. He said, "Economically it is an important decision. We can't mortgage the franchise on any one individual. That's why it is taking so long."

While financially the Jazz can only afford to, or are only willing to deal with Griffith and Duren on halfway practical terms, it will need those plays Nissalke plans on implementing for the two. Without those plays and those players, the Jazz will possibly have a season which would, in comparison, make negotiations pleasant.

BS game: shootout expected

By KENT TINGEY
Universe Staff Writer

Football game this week pitting Long Beach against BYU will feature two explosive offenses. The key to the game should be the defenses. Boise State is coming off its best season in years and head coach Dave Curry has promised his club will be even better. The 49ers return 12 starters from a year ago and a host of important players. Curry states that the reason for the improvement is because the quality of the athletes at Boise is the best it has ever been.

The 49er defensive unit, which was mainly responsible for the team's seven wins a year ago returns a lot of experience. Leading this defensive unit will be Ben Jones, a giant 6-6, 260 pound tackle who was first-team All-PCAA in addition to being named honorable mention All-America last year. Speaking of his own defense, Jones said, "Rudolf can be one of the premier line men in the country. Our line as a whole has a chance to be one of the best on the coast."

Linebacking core returns three of four starters as prompted by Curry to state, "This is one of our best areas and most talented."

Least experienced area on the team is the secondary. Three of four starters are gone. But the returning starter is Ervin Cobbs. Cobbs has been an All-AA two years running and last year was honorable mention All-America.

Cougar offense, which has been productive the last two weeks, will be forced to execute just as well as the defense. The offensive line, which is rapidly improving, will again be vital as it was last year. The Cougars do have one big question mark. Quarterback Homer Jones who injured his thigh in the last game is doubtful this week. According to head coach Norm Chow, Jones will probably not start. This leaves the two running back positions to Scott Phillips and Eric Lane. Lane has also injured and the Cougar coaches hope he will be able to come Saturday.

Long Beach State offense should be much improved a year ago. The 49ers are a wide-open offense much like BYU. Kevin Starkey, a quarterback, will be the starting quarterback. The ability of the offense and the speed of the receivers has helped Curry to say, "It could be a bombs away year for us." He said that the Cougar secondary will be the main target at wide receiver.

The 49ers will enter the game with a one and one record. They are coming in fresh from a last second overtime Bowling Green victory.

Long Beach State which gave the Cougars their toughest games a year ago. The game was a close one, with Long Beach winning 31-17.

BYU defense will be hard pushed to repeat its performance. The 49ers will pass as much as they can. Consequently the Cougar secondary will be at its best.

The game will be important for BYU if it is to break the momentum it has and break into the top 25. The Cougars must win each game from here on out if they are to get invited to a bowl game.

Kurt Gunther, walk-on kicker for BYU, boots an extra point in the San Diego State game. Gunther became BYU's top kicker when the starting kicker, Dave Taylor, left school.

No one 'kicking' about kicker

By MARILYN HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Nobody is kicking about Kurt Gunther's performance as this year's starting kicker on BYU's football team, including Gunther.

Gunther, a walk-on from Provo, Utah who never imagined himself as the starting kicker for this year's football team had the position unexpectedly handed to him after Dave Taylor had grade problems and went home. Just as unexpectedly he has performed in a way that has not only pleased the crowds, but LaVell Edwards, head football coach.

Edwards said he had hoped Gunther would do well but "frankly he hadn't shown it in practice." According to Edwards, a situation like this happens every once in awhile where a player performs much better when he is in a game position.

"It's a matter of confidence in yourself and realizing the coaches have confidence in you," said Edwards.

Gunther, a sophomore in business management, walked on to the team as a freshman in the spring of 1979 after fulfilling a mission in Brazil. He said he wanted to pole vault but "had a hard time getting himself off the ground."

That year he kicked for the junior varsity football team and was 26 for 28 in PATs. He also kicked his only two field goals, which were the only points BYU scored against Mesa Community College.

Gunther kicked his first field goal this year in the BYU-Wisconsin game and is eager to get a few more under his belt. When asked how he felt about the game against Wisconsin, Gunther said, "nervous."

"Wisconsin got beat by Purdue because of field goals," he said.

Gunther claims the responsibility of the kicking position on BYU's football team has had a major affect on his kicking improvement. "Whenever you realize the responsibility is with you there is more pressure and you buckle down and concentrate a lot better."

Gunther uses soccer style kicking and says with soccer style you can get more of your body into the ball. He learned to kick soccer style barefoot his sophomore year in high school.

Gunther claims his situation with the football team is "unique" because he is receiving no grant or financial aid. He said Edwards has been trying to get him on scholarship since this summer.

Gunther said he feels good about his kicking and gives most of the credit to his snapper Corey Pace, and his holder Bill Schoepflin. He said too often the snapper and holder do not get enough credit. "It's a three way team," Gunther said.

Speaking of his goals Gunther said, "I want to be able to feel good about each game and feel as though I've helped the team as a whole."

When asked what he predicted Gunther's performance would be this year, Edwards said, "I think he is going to be a very good kicker for us all year long."

Field hockey team to host round-robin tournament

Another year older and another year wiser. Coach Jean Bathgate hopes the adage will hold true this season as her Cougar women's field hockey team launches the 1980 campaign this weekend, hosting a four-team round-robin competition Friday and Saturday on Stover Field.

Bathgate is predicting that another year of experience will be the difference between last season's dismal 1-16-3 record and this year's anticipated challenge for the Region VII title. "I have an optimistic outlook for the season," the fourth-year BYU coach said. "Most of our athletes played for us last season."

They have a year-plus experience in intercollegiate play," Bathgate continued, adding that the nucleus of her team underwent an intensive week of skill training at a field hockey camp in Long Beach, Calif. during the summer.

Four seniors — Barb Curtis, Sharon Mills,

Marie Bone, and Nina Hansen — will be joined by junior standout Teri Christensen and sophomore Maren Westover, to form the foundation of experience for the Cougars.

Friday, BYU opens play with a conference match against Colorado at 9:30 a.m. The Cougars will follow up with a 1:30 p.m. non-conference match with Boise State. Colorado will then battle the Utah Club team (made up largely of BYU alumni) in the day's concluding action at 3:30 p.m.

Saturday's schedule will feature Boise State against Colorado at 9:30 a.m. Boise State will be back in action at 12:30 p.m. when they tangle with the Utah Club team. BYU and Utah Club team will wind up the day's activity at 3 p.m. All matches are slated for play on Stover Field.

Spikers ready to host tourney

By MARILYN HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Despite a multitude of injuries the women's volleyball team should do well in the BYU Invitational Tournament beginning today, according to coach Elaine Michaels.

Twenty schools will be participating in the tournament that will include two days of pool play and one day of playoffs. This is the fourth year for the invitational tournament, intended to give playing experience before conference play. Among the teams attending are Utah State University and other nationally-ranked schools.

Michaels said four out of six starters for the team will not be playing their usual positions because of injuries. Madge Ferreira, a freshman from Brazil, collided with one of her teammates the first day of competition in last week's tournament with San Diego, resulting in injury to her elbow. Lisa Motes, a junior from Arizona, is recovering from knee surgery, and Andi Westover, a junior from California, is still recovering from a foot operation and illness. Carol Bean is having trouble with her dislocating shoulders.

Michaels said the four starters are recuperating nicely and the injuries should hurt the team for only two more weeks.

Michaels, however, is still optimistic about the upcoming tournament. "The players are excited, have confidence, and the coaches have confidence. I think we'll do well."

Michaels is also optimistic about the upcoming WAC conference beginning Oct. 11. "We have potential to be in the top eight of the conference," she said.

Michaels has been coaching BYU volleyball for the past 20 years and has seen a lot of changes in the program, now more specialized. It is demanding participation-wise.

According to Michaels, working on perfecting technique is what she likes and that's what the program now requires.

Freshman starter an 'artist'

By MARILYN HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Brigitte McBride, starting outside hitter for the women's volleyball team, is an artist — on and off the volleyball court.

Miss McBride, a freshman majoring in art from Yorba Linda, Calif., developed her talent as an artist and a volleyball player during her high school years, receiving honors and awards in both areas.

Her motivation to play volleyball came when she moved to a new area her freshman year. "I liked sports and thought it would be a good way to meet new people," Miss McBride said.

According to Miss McBride she had never played volleyball then, and as a result hadn't learned any bad habits. "I was super hyperactive and my coach saw my potential and put me on the varsity team."

Miss McBride said she attributes much of her skill to learning how to play the right way from the first.

Miss McBride's training proved profitable as she went on to be named player of the year in the high school Orange League and also named to the all-CIF southern section AA team for two years. Her awards, however, are not limited only to volleyball.

Miss McBride has worked in water color and charcoal in the field of art and received an award of $100 from the California Women's Round Club for her work. She enjoys art and says it runs in her family. When asked what she would do with art she said she hoped to join either art illustration or advertising.

Miss McBride was introduced to BYU through another team member — Val de Portales, a sophomore from Villa Park, Calif. They became acquainted while playing on the same junior national team in California. According to Miss McBride, "the coach got Val interested and I followed similar lines."

Visiting BYU's campus calmed all the fears Miss McBride had about coming to an LDS school and she decided to attend because of the art program as well as volleyball.

Miss McBride said she likes BYU. She especially likes the standards of the team because "the time isn't all radical. When we go somewhere they have good manners."

Miss McBride describes the team as awesome when they are playing as one unit. She blamed the individualistic play of team members for the losses in last week's tournament in San Diego.

In response to the question of the team's potential she said, "We should be right up there in the conference."

Her goal for herself is to be the best and eventually be named to all-conference.

Intramural poll made

By BECKY COLLYER

BYU students have been known for their football enthusiasm and this year has been no different. Record numbers have turned out for the variety football games.

Another fact of BYU football is also receiving students in record numbers. This year we had 4,320 participants in the program and this year we have 350 men's teams and 50 women's teams.

A special computer rating system, the Naillon Index, was used to help determine each team's rank.

Ringling Bros. and crew set up for Salt Lake show

By CARLA A. SCHIEVE
Universe Staff Writer

When the lion in the "Wizard of Oz" cried out, "Lions and tigers and bears!" he wasn't thinking of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus. But he should have been!

Biggest and best

Ringling Bros. begins its 110th edition with this year's phenomenal production. What this show lacks in lions it makes up for in polar bears, llamas, camels, elephants, tigers and seven different breeds of horses.

"This show is the biggest and best," Ethan Cartwright, regional marketing director said. "Nothing with Ringling Bros. is ever cheap."

Not only is it the longest running show in history, it has the largest production company of any show, including over 150 animals, 250 performers, and 100 behind-the-scenes people.

Those 100 "backstage" people are busy 10, 12, or 15 hours a day caring for the animals — hosing the elephants, soaking the polar bears' feet in disinfectant, sweeping the cages and sweeping the animals off, doing all the millions of things that the beasts need done for them, Cartwright explained.

Being in the circus requires a near lifetime dedication to the show, Cartwright said. Performers work six days a week, every week, often giving three performances in one day. "When the circus holds auditions," Cartwright said, "we look for people who are willing to travel — to dedicate everything they have to it."

"Ninety-nine percent of the performers are of European descent," he said. Children of circus people become the next generation's performers. They may change their specialty, as Cartwright did from horses to elephants. Cartwright added, but the decision to become a circus performer is usually made at a young age.

A whole subculture in America and Europe," Debbie Reverman, assistant to the regional marketing director, said.

Elephants!

The mile-long circus train, weighing close to 2,800 tons (including elephants and polar bears) arrived in Salt Lake City Tuesday at four in the afternoon. Wednesday morning the elephants, holding tail-to-tail, lead the animal walk to the Salt Palace. Every so often, one would crinkle his nose up and sneeze at a passerby. The enormous three and one-half ton pachyderms seemed to enjoy their walk and the hosing down they got at the rear of the Salt Palace. And the elephants, who stroked each others' faces with their trunks seemed to enjoy each other.

Axel Gautier, who has worked 22 years with Ringling Bros. training their elephants guided them along. "They're as individual as children," he said. "They're just like family to me."

There are 21 elephants in all, with names as common as Susan and Karen, and as unusual as Pootsie, Targa, and Karanudi. At 36, Targa is the oldest elephant and Sandra the youngest at four. All in all, Gautier explained, they consume one and one-half tons of hay daily and 35 gallons of water each.

Polar bears imported

But elephant acts will only be part of the circus, Cartwright said. New this year is a polar bear show, directed and trained by Ursula Botcher who is only five feet tall. The only place she works with the polar bears, which weigh 800 to 1,400 pounds and stand up to 12 feet tall, is in the ring. She must be on guard at all times because the polar are incredibly strong and unpredictable. Their three inch claws are not retractable and one blow can easily kill a man.

New acts

Cartwright said other new acts this year include the Uria Troop, motorcycle stunt riders, who perform in a 17-foot steel enclosure; the Circus in Space, an elephant extravaganza; and the Guerrero's 52-foot above ground high wire act.

Costs for the production have run into three million plus dollars.

'Diantha' a story worth seeing

By KIM KAATMAN
Entertainment Editor

I left the Neike Experimental Theater having seen "Diantha: A Pioneer Portrait," with an appreciation for the actress and author of the show Miss Barta Heiner, and with an increased appreciation for the story she told.

As I think about the show, the story — that of the early history of the LDS Church — stands out in my mind the most and for that I compliment the actress. She was the vehicle through which an emotional, true story was told. She didn't distract from the story, but brought it to life on the stage.

The character Miss Heiner presented to the audience was that of her great, great aunt, Diantha Farr Clayton, fourth wife of William Clayton (co-mother of the well-known LDS hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints"). In the presentation of "Diantha's" character, Miss Heiner relied on documented facts and events surrounding the life of her great, great aunt, but declares in the program that "because of the insufficiency of personal information, the character of Diantha is an interpretive mixture of Mormon women in similar situations."

The interpretive abilities of Miss Heiner allowed her to hold the audiences attention for one hour and fifteen minutes, without a break. With the exception of one short amount of time, I felt very interested in the story she was telling. And she told her story to a "stranger," a man who reminded her very much of her grandfather. The story included her conversion to the LDS faith, memories of the Prophet Joseph Smith, memories of the horrible persecutions in Ohio, Missouri and finally in Nauvoo, and of her un-abiding faith. The message was clear — "they say sticks and stones may break your bones but words will never hurt you. Well," Diantha concludes, "it's a lie. It all hurts, it's just that you can't see the bruises on a person's heart." The bruises on Diantha's heart aren't seen, but they are felt.

With a story so dear to those in attendance, and exceptional personal anecdotes taken from personal diaries and documents, the show is definitely a success — the story is too good to be unsuccessful.

The story is a fine piece of entertainment, but the life Miss Heiner gave it is the icing on the cake. Tears flowed down the cheeks of the actress as she spoke of love, lost love, and love expected. She said, "Love is the life force — like fire. It is the most important element in a person's life... it destroys without respect and when it is lost, the memory lingers just waiting to be wanted again."

The fourth and youngest wife of Clayton, Diantha explains that polygamy was not the pot of gold at the end of her romantic rainbow. She said, "I wanted to be a first love, not a fourth consideration. Isn't it funny how life goes?" As Miss Heiner shed tears over her character's life and circumstances, Diantha's faith and testimony of the principles of the gospel rang loud and clear. The hurt was sensed but never verbalized — polygamy, persecution and loneliness were the price one paid as an LDS pioneer woman. A responsive chord was plucked in most everyone present, by the bitter-sweet story Miss Heiner told.

Being able to sustain an energetic, believable character, without additional actors, without extravagant sets or props, and having created the story in addition, is an achievement not easily matched. The monologue flowed smoothly, and the story communicated the attitude of a young LDS pioneer woman well.

The story closes, as death comes to Diantha. She sings "Come, Come Ye Saints," a hymn written by her husband, and as she sings the final verse, "and should we die before our journey's through happy day all is well, we then are free from toil and sorrow too..." she stops, looks at the stranger and in her own words, "goes into the other room without getting stuck in the door."

"World of Dance" tonight

"World of Dance" opens tonight in the deJong Concert Hall and will feature the varying talents of the BYU dance department, said Carl Wesson, BYU dance department publicity director.

"Two of these companies," he said, "are the ballroom dancers and folk dancers, directed by Lee Wakefield and Mary Bee Jensen, and they will perform The Viennese Waltz as part of their contribution to 'World of Dance.'"

According to Wesson, members of the Viennese waltz team won 25 trophies in couple competition while on tour in the Northwest United States and Canada. He added that for the third consecutive year, the team won the first place novice perpetual trophy at the Canadian Maple Leaf Championships.

Lee Wakefield, ballroom dance director, attributed the company's success to the dedication of its members.

"They practice three or four hours every day. They'll do whatever is needed, they'll bleed when you say bleed," he said. "The dancers are striving to be as excellent as the other departments performing in 'World of Dance.'"

For Wakefield and many of the team members, this is the first year with the company, he said.

"We feel a stimulation to rise to the occasion," Wakefield said. "If we didn't have 'World of Dance' to push us to performance level so soon in the semester, none of us could reach such quality so quickly."

In addition to serving as an initial incentive for dancers, "World of Dance" also acts as an educator for both the dancers and the public, said Mary Bee Jensen, director of the Folk Dancers Company.

"We try to educate the total person, not just the talent portion of the dancer," Mrs. Jensen said. "Folk Dancers Company gives performance experience and social experience."

She said most of her dancers say the most meaningful part of touring with the Folk Dancers was the friendships they made in foreign lands and the relationships they developed with each other.

Mrs. Jensen said the public is awakened to the depth of excellence of BYU dance teams and is educated as to different styles and moods of dance.

"A greater awareness is achieved on the part of both the audience and the dancers," Mrs. Jensen said.

"Talents, as well as friendships and awareness, are developed by tours and such performances as 'World of Dance.'"

The dancers are preparing for an upcoming tour she says. "One of four dances learned on tour to be presented at 'World of Dance,'" she said, "will be the flamenco."

Mrs. Jensen named the other dances to be performed: the Hopak, the Teton Mountain Stomp, and the Carolina/Kentucky Clog.

The Hopak was described by Mrs. Jensen as a "vibrant, almost acrobatic dance in which the girls complement in movement the strength of the men and the Teton Mountain Stomp as a playful cowboy number. The Carolina/Kentucky clog, she said, is an acappella clog by 12 couples.

The Ballroom Dance Company will also perform dances in addition to the waltz, Wakefield said. He reviewed the Ballroom Dance program as containing the New York Hustle, the Jailhouse Rock, and an exhibition style solo by he and his wife Linda.

The solo by the Wakefields is performed to "They're Playing Our Song" and is the routine they used in competition in July at the Official of four dances learned on tour to be presented at 'World of Dance.'" she said, "will be the flamenco."

"The public will be unable to believe the talent assembled on that stage," Wesson said.

ASBYU sells discount tickets

ASBYU again is offering BYU students a 50 percent reduction in the price of Plitt and Mann movie theater tickets.

The tickets are available each Wednesday, Thursday and Friday from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. in 447 ELWC. Plitt tickets cost $2 and Mann tickets $2.50.

According to Mark Cahoon, financial vice president, the movie ticket program began last October and saved students more than $20,000 during the fall and winter semesters. The program is the first of its kind for ASBYU. Previously, selling directly to students was prohibited.

Mann and Plitt theaters offer the tickets at a reduced rate to get more people to buy tickets in advance and to reduce cash receipts at the theater box office.

Cahoon said, "ASBYU purchases the tickets at cost and sells them at cost. Those who do the selling are volunteers."

Cahoon also said the selling hours will be increased if there is a greater demand by students for tickets.

Deciding to build on the image of smiling

phasized sight as new show. "There are more good dancers in this tour group than we planned to do a lot

audiences will see BYU

"Without a doubt, it is the most visual group

Boothe. "They are very polished."

With a smile, Winterton called the dance sec-number," adding, "All the sound is like a big band with no words so every country will un-

they have learned songs in each of the three languages, during this number, the performers will sing "bee-bops" and

"cooch."

Through September,
the Young Ambassadors spent three hours a day practicing besides completing two credit hours of culture classes. "Two weeks before school, they started courses to learn what offended and what pleased people in these countries so we could be on our best behavior," said their Director. They have also rounded up the necessary funds to pay for part of their way, suffered through the necessary shots and finished the paperwork for visas in one month.

And where will the BYU performers go?
Before their return home on October 18, the group is invited to perform in Cairo, Egypt as well as five Greek cities:
Athens, Veria, Argos,
Kastoria and Nafplion.

"We feel a stimulation to rise to the occasion," Wakefield said. "If we didn't have 'World of formance level so soon in the semester, none of us could reach such quality

so quickly."

In addition to serving as an initial incentive for

Mormon history recounted

THE MORMON EXPERIENCE by Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton. New York City: Vintage Books, a Division of Random House. Paperback $5.95.

By GAYLEN R. JACKSON
Assistant Executive Editor

One of the most difficult tasks faced by an historian is that of writing an objective account, or history, of an organization and its members when the historian is involved personally.

Yet, with the obvious handicap of personal involvement, Leonard J. Arrington, historian of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and his assistant, Dr. Davis Bitton, have accomplished just that in "The Mormon Experience," a single-volume history of what is more commonly known as the Mormon Church, written in a scholarly manner by these well-known and highly-respected historians.

Realized problems

By his own admission, Arrington realized when he started the work the problems which could befall him in writing a history of the church of which he is a member. He undertook the project at the request of New York City book publisher Alfred A. Knopf, but only with the written permission of the First Presidency of the LDS Church to have full and unrestricted access to the archives.

Scholars critical

Arrington and Bitton both realized at the outset that scholars, not members of the LDS Church, would be extremely critical of the work since both are practicing Latter-day Saints. At the same, the two were just as cognizant that members of the church would be even more critical when statements were printed that were judged to be unfair to the church.

In the words of the authors, they "have not attempted to write a tract; we have sought to understand as scholars of any faith or no faith would seek to understand. We have tried to take advantage of our empathy with our fellow Mormons, while preserving proper scholarly objectivity and availing ourselves of insights from a variety of disciplines."

Beginning with the vision of Joseph Smith, Jr., the first prophet of the church, and through whom the church was founded, the authors have attempted assiduously to treat their subject matter objectively.

Just as they emphasize that most of the immediate members of the Joseph Smith, Jr. family accepted the manifestations as professed by the younger Joseph, the authors just as quickly relate that Isaac Hale, father of Joseph Smith, Jr.'s wife, Emma, looked upon his son-in-law as coming from a family of "money-diggers."

Persecution reasons

Arrington and Bitton offer some reasons which indicate that the Mormons themselves were at least partially responsible for the animosity which existed between them and non-Mormons both in Ohio and in Missouri, as well as later in Nauvoo. Because of the fermentation of these animosities, the Mormons eventually were expelled from all these areas.

The authors maintain that the Mormons' practice of trading only among themselves and their practice of purchasing as much land as possible wherever they settled contributed in no small measure to bad feelings toward them by non-Mormon neighbors.

In Missouri, there was additional fuel added to the fires of opposition. The Mormons were accused of fomenting unrest among the Indians and of giving succor and the hand of fellowship to the Negro, practices that not only were not understood by Missourians, but completely unaccepted by them.

Polygamy with care

The authors are more than just a little careful to treat objectively the touchy subject of polygamy. They do insist, however, that the polygamy situation was overplayed by the Eastern press, while at the same time recognizing that polygamy was an emotional issue which could readily arouse anti-Mormon sentiment.

Arrington and Bitton additionally admit that polygamy was a source of dissension among members of the church. Many Latter-day Saints, they relate, left the church over the issue, including some of the LDS hierarchy. These people, after being excommunicated from the church, became in many cases the most vehement enemies of Mormonism, and some of them led the movement which resulted in the expulsion of the Mormons from Nauvoo.

Even as there was opposition to polygamy both from within and without the church when the principle was first introduced, the authors indicate there was considerable dissatisfaction with then-President Wilford Woodruff when in 1890 he presented what is known as the "Manifesto," discontinuing the practice of polygamy in the church.

Excommunicated

Those members who could not or were unwilling to accept the "Manifesto" were eventually excommunicated from the church. At least two members of the Council of Twelve Apostles resigned their positions because of their refusal to accept President Woodruff's direction concerning polygamy.

Arrington and Bitton relate that one of them was later excommunicated and the other was disfellowshipped.

Mormon Battalion

The history relates that at one point Brigham Young, who succeeded Joseph Smith as President of the church following Smith's assassination in Nauvoo in June 1844, asked the United States government to permit 1,000 Mormon men to join the army, with their pay being sent directly to church authorities. This resulted in 500 men being permitted to join the army — becoming known as the "Mormon Battalion." Their pay and bonuses went far in helping to alleviate the financial crisis faced by the church and its members.

Although Mormons are world-renowned for their cleanliness, it apparently was not always so, according to the authors. On one occasion, at a conference of bishops, Jedediah M. Grant, a counselor to Young, "asked the bishops to stand who prayed along with their families and who 'washed themselves at least once a week.' When most remained seated, he threatened to send marshals out to wash them."

Economic disaster — or at least near disaster — seemed to be the constant companion of the Mormons living along the Wasatch Front in the middle to late 1800s. Again Arrington and Bitton contribute to the fact that the Mormons would not discount trading only among themselves. Also, another factor was that Mormons discouraged actively any attempts of Gentiles to live among them.

It was not until the rich ore and mineral deposits were discovered in Utah that Gentiles came in any numbers of consequence. It also necessitated the Mormons engaging in economic intercourse with non-Mormons, resulting in a cash within the economy. Of no small import was the emphasis placed — in the latter years of the century — on the long-standing principle of tithing by President Lorenzo Snow, who had succeeded Wilford Woodruff as the Mormon leader.

Another delicate subject dealt with successfully — an opinion not shared necessarily by all readers — by the authors is the position of women in the church.

First Relief Society

In 1842, twelve years after the church was organized, the Ladies Relief Society was established and Emma was "ordained" by her husband as its first president. At the time, Smith said he "turned the key" over to them and promised that "this society shall rejoice and intelligence shall flow down from this time."

According to Arrington and Bitton, women in the church have continuously been encouraged to secure good educations, and have been urged to prepare themselves to provide an income for themselves and their families should the occasion arise that this became necessary.

It is true, the authors conclude, that Mormon women do not hold the priesthood, and likely never will. However, they write, there has been little pressure from within the church to allow women the priesthood. They maintain that the greatest pressure upon the leaders of the church to grant priesthood to women has come from outside the church — from sources having no complete understanding of the church or its government.

Financial holdings

A fair account is revealed regarding the financial holdings of the church, both in the form of wholly-owned corporations and the names of companies in which the church holds some stock. However, Arrington and Bitton declare that until just in recent years, the church did not maintain a securities portfolio.

It will come as a definite surprise to many church members to discover that the church does not own the Union Pacific Railroad Company. While the church does own stock in the UP Railroad, the authors say it is not a substantial block. Nor, they indicate, does the church hold substantial ownership interest in any public corporation.

Arrington and Bitton have written a definitive account of the Mormons from their beginnings to 1978. They have truly fulfilled their purpose of taking "advantage of our empathy with our fellow Mormons, while preserving proper scholarly objectivity."

Their history is one which should be found to be interesting and informative to both Mormons and non-Mormons alike.

'Shogun': the NBC runaway hit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fred Silverman's own television season has found the legitimizing it needed — "Shogun," a bona fide runaway hit that may actually bring about The Miracle at NBC.

They'll talk about it for years, the way baseball fans speak reverently of the 1914 Miracle Braves of Boston, who came from last place to win the National League pennant.

Silverman's ambition seemed even less attainable. The first 18 months of his NBC presidency had seemed like an effort to shrink the legend of Fred Silverman, Super-programmer. Yet, he boldly predicted that NBC would be No. 1 by this Christmas.

Some considered Silverman's show of bravado merely a smokescreen meant to keep his RCA bosses from thinking about the bleak present. Silverman was fighting for his job. Then NBC lost the Moscow Olympics, and the pipe dream seemed dead.

But Silverman got lucky. Actors went on strike, leaving all three networks, in essence, on even terms. And Silverman, thinking on his feet, moved quickly to create a "revised fall schedule," meant to suggest the illusion of a real season.

"Shogun," an expensive miniseries of unknown potential, was the cornerstone of Silverman's plan. There were those at NBC who questioned Silverman's decision to "waste" "Shogun" last week, when the other two networks were saying there was no season.

Silverman gambled, and won. "Shogun" overcame its idiosyncracies — namely, overlength and a considerable amount of untranslated Japanese — and became a sweeping hit. Viewers proved Silverman right. They did want a new season. "Shogun," the five-part, 12-hour miniseries based on James Clavell's novel, represented a new season.

Viewers repaid Silverman by watching the thing in droves. They bought sake and paperback editions of Clavell's fat novel and made "Shogun" a television phenomenon along the lines of "Roots."

"Shogun" won't match "Roots" in ratings numbers, but it was easily the network's all-time entertainment winner. Complete national ratings were not yet compiled Monday, but overnight ratings from Chicago, New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco showed that well more than half the viewers watching television in those cities were watching "Shogun."

Viewing dropped

somewhat on Friday, perhaps due to the Jewish holiday or even viewer fatigue. But "Shogun" was a winner, a big winner.

Silverman grabbed the opportunity to use "Shogun" as a momentum-builder. He heavily promoted upcoming NBC programs, such as the currently running "Centennial" reprise and the season premiere of "Little House on the Prairie."

"Shogun" succeeded in cementing the position that no matter the other guys were doing, NBC was delivering a fall season. NBC on hand, the V Series in a few weeks, Silverman's got it praying for Dod Vankes. Even if it's a strike ended week, it would, December before networks got delivery of their series. By then, Silverman may well have miracle accomplish-

Lamanite Generation entertains

BYU's Lamanite Generation dancers performed before an audience of western art dignitaries at a concluding celebration of the Utah Art Festival.

Because he was being knighted by Queen Elizabeth, O.C. Tanner, who was honored at the banquet, was unable to attend. Honoraries Arnold Friberg and Robert Redford, who flew to Chicago for the premiere of his newest film, also excused themselves.

As entertainment for the rest of the guests, The Taggart Trust invited BYU's Lamanite Generation dancers to put on a 40-minute show in Salt Lake City's Little America Hotel. Guests included classical sculptor, Edward J. Fraughton and Wilson Hurley, called "America's greatest living landscaper," by art dealer Lloyd Taggart, Jr.

Y's Club Week rush: not in "vein"

By RUTH HAMILTON
Universe Staff Writer

Club Week at BYU is a "bloody" success thanks to the large turnout of students who are supporting their favorite clubs by donating blood and competing in Club Week's blood-drive contest.

"The contest is new this year," said Bill Winfield, vice president of the Organizations Office. "We added it to Club Week hoping it would motivate more student involvement with the clubs."

Club Week has traditionally been a time for club leaders to construct a week-long exhibit advertising their club, but this year club competition has been included and has highlighted the week. The club which donates the most blood will receive tickets to the BYU-Long Beach State football game Saturday.

"Now that school is under way, students have their class schedules set, they now know where they have extra time and are looking to fill in that time with extracurricular activities," said Bill Winfield. "That is why we have club week at the beginning of the year."

Student participation sought in annual Provo fall clean-up

By MICHAEL PERKINS
Universe Staff Writer

Provo City officials have set aside the week of Oct. 6-10 for the city's Annual Fall Clean-Up Week, according to Leland Gamette, executive administrator of Provo City.

A special effort is being made to seek student participation in the clean-up campaign, Gamette said, because students have not taken advantage of the service in the past.

"We are stressing this to the students because in past years they have not taken as much advantage of this as other citizens," he said.

Gamette said the city will try to coordinate the clean up through the LDS student wards on the campus. A letter was sent to all LDS bishoprics of student wards explaining the project and asking them to encourage participation of their ward members, he said.

The letter included a quote from BYU President Jeffrey Holland referring to "BYU Blight" and students' responsibilities as citizens, according to Gamette.

"BYU Blight," an aphorism coined by Theron Luke of the Provo Daily Herald, refers to the decay of neighborhoods where students live.

"The reason we are taking this approach is the BYU administration has been very open about it this year," Gamette said.

Gamette said sanitation crews will use heavy equipment such as dump trucks and front-end loaders to haul away garbage not normally accepted for regular pick up. The free service will follow regular routes, and be on normal collection days, Gamette said.

Noting students do not usually have the facilities to haul away unwanted items, Gamette said the clean up week will be a good chance to easily dispose of rubbish.

"Students do not usually have any way to haul away their old things," Gamette said. "This will be a good chance for those who want to clean up, but can't."

He said the Clean-Up Week effort will involve the Departments of Sanitation, Streets and Parks.

"This involves many, many man-hours," he said. "It is a real chore."

Gamette said the project in past years has been very successful and provides a valuable service to the community.

"This has proven to be on of the best uses of tax dollars that we have," he said. "It is a real benefit to the citizens, and that is something the city is really here to do — to help."

City officials are trying to notify all Provo citizens through elected neighborhood representatives to get maximum participation, Gamette said.

"Provo is frequently complimented because it is a beautiful city and is very well maintained," he said. "And that is what we are trying to keep."

Gamette said the city sponsors the Clean-Up Week twice a year, in the fall and spring.

Students are now looking for something to get involved in."

There are approximately 160 clubs which operate on campus. About 50 of these clubs have booths set up in and around the Wilkinson Center displaying what their club has to offer. Kathleen Larkin, vice president of Vakhnom club said, "Vakhnom's main concern is for girls' social well-being. We want to help girls fit smoothly into campus situations; we want to get girls involved with BYU and help them feel like they belong on this campus."

This year's clubs vary from pre-med to the mime club. Club dues range from no dues to $20, depending on the type of club. Murray Mesaros, chairman from the Blue Key Club in charge of College Bowl, said, "We charge $8 membership dues. This money covers the national fee for the club and assists in our chapter's functioning."

The Japanese club charges a membership fee of $3. "The $3 covers any dinners and dances we might have," Greg Warner, vice president of the Japanese club said.

"This year's clubs are attracting a variety of students," said Winfield. "More than seven thousand students will be involved in a club this year. That is about one-fourth of the student body population." Gary Stoker, financial vice president of Samuel Hall Society, said, "Most of the response we are getting comes from friends of people who are already members. We get about 50 people signing up per day who are interested in our club."

"Even with minor difficulties, Club Week has been a terrific success," said Winfield.

U.S. postal service plans addition to zip codes to include nine digits

By JACK WALSH
Universe Staff Writer

Mail users will soon have four more digits to memorize, in an attempt by the U.S. Postal Service to economize and give more efficient mail service.

Post offices will be implementing a new nine-digit ZIP code next year in order to keep service up and costs down, said Michael S. Coughlin, assistant postmaster general, before a House subcommittee this week.

Ernest L. Olson, director of the University Press which oversees the campus mail service, said that the new system should be of help to the campus mail service, but will be costly to the university.

An entirely new ZIP system will not be formed, said Coughlin, rather four additional digits will be added to the end of existing codes. The use of the code will not be mandatory, but will be voluntary as the present ZIP code now is, he said.

The four additional digits will be made available to large mailers beginning in February and to the general public in late 1981, Coughlin said. He said the extra digits will be used to indicate an individual block face on a street, an office building or a large company.

Coughlin said preliminary analysis suggest the automation accompanying the introduction of the nine-digit ZIP code might reduce sorting costs in the magnitude of $500 million a year when the system is fully deployed, which is expected to be in 1986.

The anticipated savings will be due to the use of automated sorters that can sort mail by use of the ZIP, he said. The new digits will make possible the sorting of mail down to smaller geographical units, he said.

The new code will create costs for the university, said Olson. All stationery, letterheads and other material with the ZIP code on it will have to be replaced, he said.

Referring to the implementation of the new system at BYU, Olson said the new digits can be used to either indicate a building or a department. University officials have not yet decided which alternative to use, he said.

Having the new digits refer to buildings would be more convenient for the mail service, but having them refer to a college of department would be better for the mail users, Olson said. If it refers to a college or department, there will be less delay in service if somebody changes offices, he explained.

Inventions mark life of Utah man; started early as mechanical 'whiz'

By TOM MURDOCK
Universe Staff Writer

call him the whiz.

built his own motorcycle at age 13, had his business when he was 14, and by the time he was in high school he was teaching the class all engines.

Perry Blackburn, supervisor of maintenance at the BYU Farm in Spanish Fork, it all started when he was 12 years old living in Orderville, Blackburn has designed and created a number of inventions. One such invention was a combination heavy truck-machine shop for the farm. The machine of his traveling shop he said, is that in you have a problem, you have everything in you. You don't waste time. If you have a problem or other machinery breakdown in the field have everything you need on the truck.

besides the traveling shop, Blackburn has built and installed a hydraulic system for the manure-dumping truck. The system is quite extensive and took one month to complete.

also turned a flat bed truck into a dump truck with the installation of a hydraulic lift.

current projects include a gas tank and cutting machine. The inventions are built from spare parts or pieces of other machines that are around the farm. Most of the machines he has done in his spare time.

primary responsibility is the maintenance and repair of the equipment in the dairy. He has many of the steel-fence corrals used for the dairy. When he is not at the dairy, he is busy working on his many other projects.

when at home he spends his free time in his shop restoring or working on his antique cars. A 1930 Cadillac, a 1912 Model T speedster and a 1928 Model A Phaeton are among his collection at this time. He has driven his cars in many parades, and "I have driven many dignitaries in them," he added.

Blackburn was born in Orderville, Utah, and speaking of those years, he said, "I was about 12 years old when I became interested in mechanics. When I was 13 I turned my bike into a motorcycle by putting a motor on it."

His father died when he was 13 and shortly thereafter his mother moved the family to Cedar City where he lived until moving to Provo in 1951. While in high school he taught the auto mechanics class and started working for a car dealer in the area.

He moved to Provo and continued working for area car dealers until he went to work for Provo City in the maintenance department.

His traveling shop was built on the back of an army surplus truck that was donated to the farm. It includes a diesel tank for fuel, a generator, a power winch used for pulling, a hand winch, a hoist used for heavy lifting, a welding unit and a compressor.

Blackburn is currently working on a fuel storage tank. "I got the tanks from my brother, and the other parts are from what we had around the shop," he said. He also is working on building a woodcutting machine that the families who live on the farm can use during the winter to cut their wood.

With all his many projects, Blackburn, an LDS ward clerk and father of five, is quick to add, "my family comes first."

New test offers family hope for previously infertile adults

BOSTON (AP) — A new test shows that between five and 10 percent of infertile adults are barren because chemicals in their bodies kill sperm, but they may be able to produce babies if they take commonly available medication.

One of the researchers who developed the test said the discovery may mean hope for hundreds of thousands of American men and women who are infertile.

Between 10 and 15 percent of Americans of childbearing age are unable to produce children. Researchers had suspected that a malfunction of the body's disease-fighting system sometimes plays a role in sterility, but they were unsure how common this is.

The new test, developed by doctors at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School, shows that some men and women are infertile because they produce chemicals called antibodies that destroy sperm.

But with drugs called corticosteroids, these antibodies can be suppressed long enough for pregnancy to occur.

The study, directed by Dr. Gilbert G. Haas Jr., was published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"This objective test may be used to identify and then to help manage infertility in patients with suspected antibody-mediated infertility," the doctors wrote.

The doctors administered the test to 614 infertile people, including 257 couples. They found that 10 percent of them, 13 percent of the women and seven percent of the men — produced antibodies that killed sperm.

Haas said the study group might not be an accurate cross-section of sterile men and women, and the actual proportion of infertile people with sperm antibodies may be somewhat less than 10 percent.

Nonetheless, he said in an interview, "it could be a really significant number. You're probably talking about several hundred thousand in this country."

Researchers elsewhere have shown that steroids can be used to offset sperm antibodies.

In this study, the doctors administered corticosteroids for 13 days to three men and one woman. The antisperm activity disappeared in all four. And within a month, the woman became pregnant and one of the men impregnated his partner.

With this new test, doctors mix blood from infertile people with sperm from normal men. Then they determine whether antibodies in the blood attack the sperm.

By using the test, Haas said, physicians will be able to spot people whose infertility is caused by antibodies and then treat them with steroids.

Doctors have tried to measure these antibodies before, but the tests have been inaccurate.

"It made the academic community really doubt whether antibody-mediated infertility was really a problem or existed," Haas said. "At the very least, they worried about the validity of the testing methodology."

The current test takes six to eight hours to perform, but Haas said the researchers are working on a simpler, quicker version.

Washington Seminar

Internship offers practical training

By TAMMI WRIGHT

at in Congress or a position in an embassy may await students who participate in BYU's Washington Seminar, an internship program which furnishes students with practical experience in government in Washington, D.C.

erly offered only during spring and summer semesters, the seminar will begin a new year-round program during the 1981 semester, according to Ms. Laurie Wilson, the program administrator.

deadline for applications for winter internships is Monday. Students may pick up applications and additional information in the Department of Government, 320 KMH or may contact Ms. Wilson, 316 KMH.

encourage anyone who wants to go, to apply," said Ms. Wilson. "It's a fantastic experience."

each year, 40 students from all academic fields are selected to participate in the program, said Ms. Wilson. Participants are chosen on the basis of their "maturity, motivation, skills and ability in their area." They must be upper-division or graduate students and must have at least a 3.0 GPA.

Students chosen for the program are placed within a government private agency or with an individual for the duration of the session. "We have placed students with senators, congressmen, the Supreme Court, the U.S. Court of Customs, private economic agencies, embassies, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the President's Council on Retardation," said Ms. Wilson.

BYU rents an apartment complex where the interns live while they are in Washington, D.C., but students must provide their own transportation and food. Ms. Wilson estimates that it costs $1,000 for an eight-week term and $1,800 for a 16-week term. "Some interns are paid, but the majority pay their own way."

In addition to working four days a week in the sponsor's office, students attend lectures given by journalists and politicians, tour the Smithsonian Institute and the Kennedy Center and take advantage of cultural activities, said Ms. Wilson.

This year's faculty adviser is Thomas Alexander, professor of history and associate director of the Charles Redd Center for Western Studies. Alexander will instruct the participants in two history courses, for which they will receive eight hours of upper-division credit.

The demand for BYU students is high, said Ms. Wilson, because they do good work. "Students are frequently offered permanent jobs while back there," said Ms. Wilson.

Boys win reward for saving girl's life

LAUREN D'ALENE, (AP) — Two teenagers credited with saving the life of a 4-year-old girl in a Lake County, Ark., ditch near a roadway three and a half miles from her home on Sept. 15.

Authorities said she had been abducted four days earlier by a man with a beard. They said he had walked into the pre-school operated by the girl's parents, took the child and fled in a dirty pickup truck.

No arrests have been made.

Press barred in Singer hearings

ST. LAKE CITY (AP) — Federal Judge David K. Winder ruled today that news reporters may attend deposition sessions in the suit arising from the shooting of polygamist John Singer in July 1979.

Reporters had attended several such sessions at the invitation of the plaintiff, the $111 million suit filed by Singer's widow, Vicki.

Winder, however, some defense attorneys refused to permit their Authorities said Jodi could not have lived through another night in her condition. She suffered a hairline skull fracture, concussion and abrasions as well as shock.

At first, Robert and Dawn Aldridge offered a $10,000 reward for information leading to their daughter's safe return. Then they upped it to $25,000.

clients to testify with the reporters present. The attorneys then filed a motion to bar reporters.

Winder granted the motion Wednesday, but he denied a motion that would have imposed a gag order to prevent attorneys from discussing the case with reporters.

A lawyer for Mrs. Singer told Winder many documents casting doubt on the official version of the shooting have not yet been made public.

But Manning and Grier turned that down.

A business group and area restaurant owners donated $2,300 for the reward payoff.

"You have proven an outstanding member of the community. Thanks for displaying excellent character. We are proud of you," said Jack Jackson in a letter to the youths from the restaurant owners.

"In refusing to accept the $25,000 reward offered by Mr. and Mrs.

Aldridge, you displayed all of those traits. Unfortunately, in today's times your actions were the exception rather than the rule," the letter said.

Manning and Grier had stopped because their old car had broken down. As they stepped from the vehicle, they spotted the girl in the ditch.

Manning said his car and not himself was the hero. He said the vehicle had thrown a rod.

The Tim Weisburg concert during homecoming week is the result of a change in a four-year-old administrative policy which avoided concerts during actual homecoming activities.

According to Linda Fogg, ASBYU social vice president, past feeling has been that a concert during the week of homecoming would compete with such activities as the Homecoming Spectacular. Because of this, she said, concerts were scheduled for the week before or the week after homecoming.

Bruce Olsen, assistant to the president/university relations, said it was always a conscious decision to feature the spectacular for students and alumni.

"Concerts could have been unnecessary competition for that event," he said. "The reason for the change is simply to give students what they have requested."

At a meeting of the homecoming committee Sept. 10, a recommendation was made to President Jeffrey Holland that a concert be held during the week of homecoming.

"The new administration is very open to the students," Miss Fogg said. "The main point in our favor was that students had expressed an interest in a homecoming concert."

The fact that students are favorable to a homecoming concert is illustrated by the results of a sampling taken outside the BYU Bookstore. Of 50 students interviewed at random, 31 said a concert during homecoming would add, rather than detract, from homecoming.

"It will add to the excitement and more people will be in the mood to go during homecoming," said Sue Haslem, a junior majoring in elementary education from Delta Junction, Ark.

Some students did express reservations concerning monetary conflicts.

"Financially it will compete," said Doug Williams, a junior majoring in accounting from La Puente, Calif. "With the dances and the spectacular, all students won't be able to afford to go to everything in one week. Some will have to pick and choose," said Williams.

On the other hand, Tami Allen, a freshman in elementary education from McCammon, Idaho, said, "If you want to go, you get the money. A concert won't detract. The more there is to choose from, the more fun everyone can have because you appeal to more and different people."

Of the 50 students, 22 said they would attend the concert if there were no conflicts with their schedules. The majority of the 22 voiced an opinion similar to that of Lindsey Ford, a freshman in civil engineering from Ogden, who said, "Whether or not I went to a homecoming concert would depend on who the artist was—not that it was necessarily during homecoming. I'd go see Tim Weisburg just about anytime he came, because I like his music."

In order to bring an artist such as Weisburg to campus, homecoming or not, is a lengthy process involving approvals and detail, Miss Fogg said.

Arranging concerts is one of the responsibilities of the ASBYU social office, she said.

"The first thing the social office does is coincide a date that an artist is coming through on tour with a date that space will be available," Miss Fogg said. "This usually isn't a problem."

The next step is to get a list of possible artists approved by the dean of student life, she explained. Once names are approved, much of the red tape is cut in advance, said Miss Fogg.

BYU standards must be upheld in areas besides dress, and concerts are no exception, she said. Before a show can be performed on the BYU campus, it must be reviewed by the social vice president and at least one administrator, Miss Fogg said.

For example, in order to bring the Weisburg concert to BYU, Miss Fogg, Jim Kimmel, coordinator of student activities, and Scott Williams, in charge of scheduling for the Marriott Center, flew to San Francisco to preview the concert.

"This is to safeguard that we don't get a group here that is vulgar in dress or action," she said. "We must go through these channels to get a concert approved. It's either that or have no concerts at BYU."

Once an artist is approved and a contract signed for a specific date, production details must be handled, Miss Fogg said.

"Concerts can cost anywhere from $5,000 to $100,000," she said. "We can have an exceptional concert here for $20,000. The majority of that $20,000 will be production costs."

Lights, sound systems, ticketing, board for the artist and other costs almost nullify any profit, Miss Fogg said.

"We occasionally make a profit, but it's not a successful profit since artists often take 80 percent off the top of any profits we make beyond expenses," she said.

Ticket prices are based on sell-out projections. The Weisburg concert will cost students either $5 or $6, depending on the seat, she said.

"We can compare the prices to the same concert given the night afterwards at the University of Utah where tickets will sell for $6.50 and $7.50," Miss Fogg said. "As long as we sell out we don't have any problem about going into the hole. The only time we have to worry is if we don't sell the projected number of tickets."

Miss Fogg said ASBYU is trying to hold the cost of the Weisburg concert down to a minimum.

"Weisburg will go straight on, with no front act added," she said. "A front act could increase the cost of the tickets by a dollar."

Weisburg is a flutist and instrumentalist who has played with Dan Fogelberg. This year he released two albums, "The Best of Tim Weisburg" and "Rotations."

The homecoming show will be entirely instrumental and will be held in the Smith Fieldhouse on Oct. 8 at 7:30 p.m.

Panel recommends expulsion of Pennsylvania congressman

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee voted Wednesday to recommend that Rep. Michael Myers, D-Pa., be expelled from Congress for accepting a bribe.

Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., the panel's chairman, said the vote was 10-2 to strip Myers of his seat in Pennsylvania's First District.

Bennett said a committee report would be filed in the House by midnight enabling that body to take up the expulsion matter this week.

The chairman said it was his intention to have a House vote on Myers' expulsion before Congress adjourns Oct. 4. "There will be a detailed report filed for the public in a few days," Bennett said, who refused further comment.

Myers, testifying in front of the ethics panel before the vote, told the committee he saw his involvement in Abcam as a way of "making some easy money" but he denied breaking the law.

"I'm not saying what I did was right, but it's not criminal," Myers testified at the committee's disciplinary hearing.

"The bottom line is that I didn't do anything wrong and never intended to do anything wrong as far as selling my office goes," Myers said in a soft, quaking voice.

The Philadelphia lawmaker was convicted last month in Brooklyn of accepting $50,000 from FBI agents posing as representatives of Arab sheiks in return for help in passing a private immigration bill.

Law library ranks near top with advanced technology

By MARCEA HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Forty percent of the J. Reuben Clark Law School building contains one of the top law libraries in the nation, said David A. Thomas, law librarian and professor of law.

"The library is the laboratory of the law school," Thomas said. "It covers all four floors of the building."

He said "keeping current" is one of the major tasks of the library. To meet this task, the library has a special section for the "loose-leaf service," Thomas said. Books are put together with loose leaves so that deletions and insertions can be made. Changes are constant and insertions come in every week, Thomas said. The "loose-leaf service" contains books on every subject, but labor, security and taxes are the most widely used subjects, he said.

Despite the fact the law library is one of the most advanced libraries in technology, Thomas said there are still many challenges.

The library is rapidly converting to computers, he said. The computers contain card cataloging not only for the J. Reuben Clark law library, but also for other law libraries, he said. The library is one of the founders of the Research Libraries Group which initiated a system of catalogue sharing with other law libraries throughout the country, Thomas said.

The computer system also handles the bookkeeping and cataloging of periodicals, he said.

The library contains a very extensive microfiche collection, Thomas said. "The collection is a 99 percent space saver. The library also has a phonetic system which contains all the white and yellow pages of all towns throughout the United States with a population of at least 25,000."

The reserve library contains all current periodicals and also copies of examinations which are available to the public, he said. "The reserve library is unique in that it is self service," Thomas said.

The library employs 14 full-time workers, a drop from 20 employees several years ago, he said. Thomas attributes this drop to efficiency from technical advances. There are also 35 to 45 students employed on a part-time basis, he said.

All of the many law library facilities are open to the public, Thomas said. It is open from 6 a.m. to midnight, six days a week.

Iraqi army continues push into Iran

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi armor and infantry pushed deeper into Iran Wednesday, claiming the capture of three more towns and driving hardpressed Iranian troops away from the border. The two Moslem enemies urged their people to fight on in a "holy war."

As a worried world watched, the "oil war" continued.

Flights of U.S.-made Iranian fighter-bombers and flotillas of gunboats attacked Iraqi oil installations for a third day, and Tehran said far-ranging Iraqi warplanes had attacked Iran's giant Kharg Island oil terminal. The important Iranian refinery at Abadan was reported still burning, two days after Iraqi warplanes and artillery began bombing it.

The Persian Gulf oil-shipping facilities of both nations were reported shut down. The war poses no immediate serious threat to U.S. oil supplies — unless the fighting widens and stops all oil trade in the Gulf.

Iranian reinforcements were being rushed to the flashpoint areas along the 300-mile war front, Tehran Radio said. The beleaguered defenders of the Iranian oil-refinery city of Abadan apparently were holding out doggedly against an Iraqi siege.

The Iraqis claimed to have captured at least three more Iranian towns in the central border region 350 miles southwest of Tehran. Iran's government conceded its forces had made tactical withdrawals.

The Iraqis asserted that four Americans, whom they did not identify, were captured with Iraqi soldiers in the border fighting north of Abadan. The report, which gave no further detail, could not be verified. Official reports on total casualties in the ground fighting and the heavy air raids were not available. Each side claimed to have shot down dozens of the other's planes during the cross-border air raids.

Like Ten' concert set to feature student who sings professionally

Chad Murdock headlines the BYU Cultural Office's Take Ten Concert today at 10 a.m. in the Wilkinson Center Memorial Auditorium.

"The purpose of these concerts is to feature school and community talent," said Liz Paulson, director of the Take Ten Concerts.

Miss Paulson said Murdock, a junior majoring in theater and dramatic arts from Beaver, Utah, is a professional singer. He was a dancer on the Donna Jo show, and now plays the part of Todd Richards in the national touring group of 'Saturday Night Fever'.

Murdock acted in the BYU film, 'The Trophy Case,' and will act various campus plays this year, Miss Paulson said.

When asked how he started performing, Murdock said his story is different in that he didn't act in theater.

In high school he was mostly into sports—football, riding horses in jumps and track," he said.

His dream began when he was

11. "I had a terrible voice," Murdock said. "I wanted to someday be able to sing." So he said he would sing with the radio, trying to make his voice sound like the performers.

Although Murdock never had voice lessons, he said he had special help.

"I asked the Lord for help," Murdock said. "I promised that if he would help me sing, I would never leave the telling of his part out of my story."

Since singing a solo at a high school assembly at 15, Murdock has considered music his "first love." Murdock says his style of singing is, "not to blow people away, but to communicate through music."

"I'm not as concerned with how it sounds," Murdock said, "as I am with how it feels."

Murdock said the 30-minute show will feature popular songs as well as some original songs written by himself, his accompanist Brett Simmons, and his agent Jeffery Priest, president of CSC Artists Management.

Keeping Mormon heritage purpose of symposium

Preservation of the heritage of the church is the purpose behind "A History of Mormon Culture," a symposium presentation to be held at BYU.

James G. Alexander, professor of history and associate director of the Center for Western Studies, said the idea for the symposium came a year ago.

A group of faculty members was asked about the developments in the study of the LDS Church.

"We realized that in order to unify and preserve these ideas and take an interdisciplinary, integrative study,"

Members of the LDS church must be the preservers of their heritage, Alexander said.

"This symposium will give us a way of looking at the culture and traditions of the church," he added.

BYU students may participate in this program for $2 for both days and $1 for one day. Cost to non-students is $10 for both days and $6 for one day.

"We'd hoped to cover a broad range of the different aspects of Mormon culture," Alexander said. "We've accomplished that."

The presentation will cover subjects ranging from Mormon folk life to the future of Mormonism. Anthropology, art, history and music will also be discussed. Sessions will consist of formal paper presentations and interpretive presentations in dance, music and photography.

Members of the LDS church must be the preservers of their heritage, Alexander said.

"This symposium will give us a way of looking at the culture and traditions of the church," he added.

BYU students may participate in this program for $2 for both days and $1 for one day. Cost to non-students is $10 for both days and $6 for one day.

Mormon society gives students opportunity to see classics

Over 3,500 students have been given the film experience in the past weeks through the ASBYU film society.

Greenhalgh, director of film society, explained the purpose, history and organization of film society.

He was set up to give students the chance to see classic American pictures," Greenhalgh said. "A lot of students on campus started in 1975 because they wanted to see classic films."

Greenhalgh said the idea soon became so popular that it was officially under the jurisdiction of the Student Center.

The first showing featured "Singing Rain," and "Brigham Young," Greenhalgh said.

The members of the film society committee handle bookkeeping, research, and the other behind-the-scenes duties involved each week, Greenhalgh said.

"Specifically, Sharon Smith is the assistant director in charge of pre-production work and bookkeeping," Greenhalgh said. "Matt Ball is the film committee's representative. Teresa Zickfoose is the handbill researcher and everyone works as announcers and projectionists."

"We try to teach the audience about the film," Greenhalgh said. "Before the film an announcer gets up and tells some interesting points about the film, things not listed on the handbill."

ASBYU offers grants

Students encouraged to publish

By LOIS M. BLAKE
Universe Staff Writer

With a budget seven times larger than the ASBYU's presidential office budget, the student research fund is expanding to encourage publication as well as research.

Bob Hill, chairman of the fund, said the budget for student grants is $18,000. According to Hill, a graduate student in psychology, the fund is one of the largest sources of grants available to BYU students. The amount is approved by the executive council and put under the auspices of the academic office.

New this year for the fund is the journal submission fund. Academic vice-president Tom Peterson explained that there are "pay journals" which publish articles if the author pays for it.

The idea of the fund is to subsidize students who have their articles accepted by such periodicals. He said for lack of money, the fund is able to pay up to half of the publication fee. "It's the end result that counts," he said. "Having BYU students publish puts the university on the map."

ASBYU president Jeff Duke said BYU has the potential to do much more publishing than it is at present. Peterson, a senior majoring in English from Madison, Wis., said he would like to see being published become a goal of every university student.

"If an article is publishable, I'd like to see everything done possible to get it published," he said.

"It's not popularized, but it's something of significance."

He cited dances, concerts, the Mormon Arts Festival and football games as good times that will come and go. "But being published," he said, "goes on the record. It stands out."

Peterson said publishing before graduation leads to better jobs, and better chances of admission into graduate school.

Duke said the bottom line has been given in remarks from President Spencer W. Kimball and President Jeffrey Holland — everything should be related to learning.

"Unless learning is applied to the benefit of men," Duke said, "it is often fruitless."

A second new aspect of the program is the student research fund symposium, Hill said. The object, he said, is to bring in guest speakers to lecture research-related topics.

"This portion is still in development stages, so at present most of the speakers come through the research department," he said.

The $18,000 student research fund is used in four ways, Hill said.

"The majority of the money goes to the grants per se," he said. "A portion is allotted to every college in the university, with the dean of each college selecting the projects submitted in his area."

Hill said the projects are ultimately approved by himself, based on the recommendations of the committee of deans.

Applications may be picked up from the receptionist on the fourth floor of the Wilkinson Center, he said. Deadline for submission is 5 p.m., Oct. 15, said Hill.

Projects in the past have included such topics as the effects of TV on child-parent relationships; whether children prefer the TV or their parents; aspects of muscle development from dance classes; and aspirations of LDS women in the professional world. Many technical projects are also approved.

Hill said about 50 percent of proposed research projects receive grants, with $150 being the average award given.

The student research fund also sponsors a research poster exhibit, giving a cash prize for the winning posters, Hill said. Entries are judged on the research findings by a panel of judges.

The time and cost involved with research can be very discouraging, especially to undergraduates, said Peterson. The research fund is designed to encourage students to put learning into action, he said.

Hill said the lack of facilities and supplies can also discourage research. He said supplies may be purchased with the grant money. After the project is completed, the equipment goes to the department, thereby upgrading facilities for others as well, he said.

Y appreciates Badger hosts

New Mexico was humiliating — meaning embarrassing. But Wisconsin was humbling — meaning inspirational.

Wisconsin helped BYU forget a New Mexico loss. But more importantly, the Badgers reminded the Cougars of the importance of being good losers — and good winners.

"If they had won the game, they couldn't have been happier," Alan Knight, ASBYU's athletics vice president remarked. "Their football is what football is meant to be."

Several BYU fans who attended the Wisconsin game have commented on the Badger's impressive friendliness — even after their defeat. They could not have demonstrated better sportsmanship. They could not have been better hosts.

For example, Wisconsin cheerleaders and yell leaders led the approximately 1,200 BYU fans in Cougar cheers in addition to rousing their own fans into hearty Badger yells. The Badger band had taken the time to learn the Cougar Fight Song — playing it as fans exited the stadium as well as before BYU's victory. And, Badger fans didn't leave the game until it was over, even though it was evident by late in the third quarter that BYU would be victorious.

Saturday Long Beach State visits Cougar Stadium. This is the Cougars' chance to match — or better yet, surpass — the friendliness and hospitality shown to them by the Badgers.

Badger parking woes worse than Cougars', yet problem controlled

By FLOYD ROSE

Since the plan to expand Cougar Stadium was announced there has been a barrage of reasons given for opposing its construction. One argument against expansion was to be expected (it seems to arise each time a new edifice is proposed): where will all the people park who visit the structure?

Parking problems at the present stadium are minor, both for those who attend football games and those who live in the area around the stadium. But many fear that when the stadium is expanded parking problems will have ballooned as well.

Until my recent trip with the football team to Wisconsin I felt those with parking problem paranoia had good reason to worry, but now I wonder if overconcern is necessary.

Camp Randall Stadium is located in the heart of downtown Madison, Wis., not more than one and one-half miles from the Capitol Building. Parking facilities are few and far between. Yet, the stadium seats twice as many spectators as the present Cougar Stadium. Wisconsin definitely has the potential for severe parking problems, but believe it or not Badger fans have overcome their problems. Sure it called for a little sacrifice on the part of a lot of people, but they have managed to do it.

How? The neighbors to the stadium actually rent their driveways, front yards, back yards and any other possible parking spaces they have to fans who must drive to games.

But, what shocked me most were the sights on the way to the game Saturday morning. Our bus left the hotel two hours before kickoff time. I saw people a good 45 minutes walk from the stadium packing up their things and going on foot to the game.

It was a pleasant surprise to see that a lot of people could overcome this not so big problem in a town where football is where it's at during the fall.

It seems football is where it's at for a lot of people in Provo during the fall too. And fretting over parking problems shouldn't detract from that. After all, fans in Provo are just as devoted as fans in Madison.

Put students first

Editor: Kirby Packham's facts are as faulty as his reasoning. I have not biked to campus since the 25th person to steal my old reliable bike removed both wheels and the seat; the bike I bought to replace it was stolen in June.

Those employees like Brother Packham who walk to work are doubly blessed, but those who claim they would be late for work solely because of the few minutes spent walking from their parked cars need only follow the pattern of their students who have long managed to be on time by leaving home a few minutes earlier. If the army of paid employees really believed in sharing their "little consideration" with those who receive so much less, punctuality would be no problem. In-

Remedy for BYU Blight

Editor: Unfortunately the article by Brent Brady (Tuesday, Sept. 16) does have some merit, but we as students shouldn't let ourselves be dominated by the apathy of a few landlords. I know of houses that have been painted by the students in exchange for one or two months rent. This summer I knew a student who mowed the lawn for part of his rent.

The "BYU Blight" is an excellent way for many students to "kill two birds with one stone." By doing repairs and/or cleaning, students may be able to get some rent free, but more importantly the "BYU Blight" and "Provo Syndrome" will be eliminated. As a reminder, Student Community Services furnishes paint brushes and tools free of charge for those working to clean up their places of residence.

Alan Knight apology

Editor: Because of the recent controversy over the early sale of card stunts tickets to BYU home football games, I would like to take this opportunity to formally apologize to the student body. As the ASBYU Vice President of Athletics, I realize that I am ultimately responsible for the mix-up and if I had the opportunity to change some of my judgments and decisions that were made at that time, I would. But unfortunately I cannot. I can only express to the students that I am sorry for the mistakes that were made and assure them that the basketball tickets will be distributed fairly and equitably according to the published policies.

McMahon merits praise from Y fans

After BYU's loss to New Mexico fans' wrath fell on quarterback McMahon. It wasn't that McMahon was responsible for the loss — defense, for one, gave up 25 poi but rather because fans waited for to achieve the impossible after season interview. After the Cougars' humiliating experience in New Mexico, they bounced back with style and claimed two impressive victories those wins, McMahon has played role. He is currently one of the quarterbacks in the nation with touchdown passes and 857 yards air. He may very well live up cocky remarks he made in Aug.

After the Wisconsin game McMahon was again the center of controversy. Sports writers from Wisconsin and Chicago said McMahon plained of the stringent life and at BYU. He later evaded ques about those comments.

Big government, not Jimmy Carter responsible for nation's troubles

By BOB SALLANDER
Universe Editorial Writer

President Carter has deserved criticism during his administration, but the current national outlook is not completely his fault. American government is simply too big.

Captain Peanut has proved his incompetence as a strong decisive president in handling the Iran situation and Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, but inflation, recession, unemployment and other economic problems besetting the United States have been brewing for years. They simply are coming to a head now.

The problems began as early as the Great Depression and Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration.

The New Deal, which perhaps was a positive move for the national economy then, began a governmental philosophy that has lead to the present negative situation. That philosophy: cradle to grave security.

FDR popularized the idea that government should be the employer of last resort. Federal aid in the form of building projects was initiated. And Social Security, which is probably the government's most abused program, came into being.

That the New Deal bolstered the United States' short term prosperity is indisputable, but now, 50 years later, the nation must pay for all the freebies.

The fact is, the U.S. government is violating the terms of the capitalistic system. It is involving itself too deeply in the economy of the nation through a seemingly unending barrage of regulations. And, as economist Milton Friedman says, "economic freedom is an essential requisite for political freedom."

Friedman's statement indicates that Americans are quickly losing their political freedom because they are losing their economic freedom — hence dissatisfaction with government.

Friedman continues: "By enabling people to cooperate with one another without coercion or central direction, it reduces the area over which political power is exercised. In addition, by dispersing power, the free market provides an offset to whatever concentration of political power may arise. The combination of economic and political power in the same hands is a sure recipe for tyranny."

This concept was brought out in 1928 by U.S. Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis. "Experience should tell me to be most on our guard to protect liberty when the government's purposes are beneficial," he said.

And Thomas Jefferson, one of this nation's great statesmen and presidents, and a framer of the Constitution was well aware of the pitfalls of a large central government. He said, "If we are to have a government which restrain men from injuring one another, which shall them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement."

Unfortunately government at all levels has strayed Jefferson's ideas and the ideas of Adam Smith, the father of capitalism.

Smith's economic system was designed to run smoothly through people's voluntary cooperation. In his system could become rich and prosperous, and they could become poor and destitute. But an equal chance to lose was given to all.

With today's governmental Robin Hoodism, however, U.S. economic system has lost its capacity for equality. People who can't work are taken care of by the government who won't work are taken care of by the government who fail in business are taken care of by the government — all at the expense of the worker who supports himself and his family.

The worker is beginning to resent using the "sweat brow" to not only earn his daily bread, but also the bread for those on the governmental dole. There is a chafing of the American worker will become disenchanted with trying to get ahead by working, and go on welfare, will eventually refuse to support those on government.

Heaven help us in either case.

There is still time, luckily, to pay the consequences New Deal and save the American society without it collapsing as some predict.

By phasing out governmental aid, and holding the government to its intended role to umpire the affairs of America and protect them from foreign powers; and by returning responsibility to the individual to take care of himself. United States can be saved from disappearing internal moil and even possible collapse.
